Aurore Thibout is a textile and fashion designer and artist living in Paris, France. In her work, she captures the passage of time and explores the concept of memory through creating limited editions and unique pieces. Melding tradition and innovation, her creative process begins with selecting materials, and involves recycling antique fabrics and using natural dyes. Her collections reflect cultural heritage from past centuries through to the present day, and she regularly develops work through a process of collaboration.

In this talk, she will discuss the challenges in creating work through a dialogue between various disciplines, artists and craftspeople from all over the world, crossing borders and being inspired by difference to nourish her multi-faceted approach. Working with a process of conscious creation and reflecting on the legacy for future generations, she will focus on the potential represented by research-creation projects that incorporate and reinvent techniques to create a new approach, one that is respectful of nature and human well-being as a whole.
